My mum was tidying up her wardrobe the other day and she gave me a silk scarf she had found. She was really excited about it because she hadn't seen it for years and I was fascinated by its story. Her grandmother had given it to her when she was a child. My mum had worn it on her first date with my dad, who was really keen on it, and after that she would wear it every time they went out. She used to wear it with everything, even leather jackets and flowery dresses! It was her lucky scarf. When they got married, they moved into a new house and she thought she'd lost it, so she was really happy about finding it. Now I wear it all the time. Let's see if I get the same luck that she used to have!

My cousins have been home-schooled since they finished primary, so they haven't been to school for four years. They've been studying with their parents and a neighbour at home all that time, and they say it's been a great experience. Their dad is really passionate about learning, and he's strict, so they count on him to give them the difficult lessons. Their mum is more easy-going and she believes people can teach themselves if they are determined, but she signs my cousins up for clubs and activities in town, and they've learnt lots that way. They also teach each other whatever they're interested in. This month they've been learning about the history of rock music! They've become sociable and hard-working kids and they've passed all their national exams, so it seems they've been doing it right!

4 18 Listen and write the question.

Is the cousins' home education making them into shy people?
